~~~~~ This is a story about my life and how I changed my mind about the way I approached life, and how I am living now. I was born in the South Bronx. In the '60s, my parents were working class, but they believed in education. They always saw their children get an education. We lived in public housing, and many of our neighbors were Puerto Rican and African-American. This neighborhood was not a good place to live. We had gangs of youth who went around with their baseball bats and knives. We were not allowed to walk the streets alone. We were afraid of the gangs. But I learned to enjoy the feel of the pavement under my feet as I walked down the street. I loved the rhythm of the cars speeding by as I played stickball in the vacant lot behind our house. I attended the all-black and all-Latin School of the Holy Spirit on the West Side of Manhattan. We attended classes all day and then played basketball in the afternoons. I played most sports. I was recruited to play for the college team at Long Island University, but I couldn't leave my friends and my father, who was then a master at the local trade union school. I was involved in the black student movement. I organized protests and carried out many other activities at the university. I was also in the choir at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. I sang lead soprano and I was in many a concert. I married a Puerto Rican man, and we went to live on the West Side of the Bronx. That was also where I found my teacher, Mr. Korbly, when I was 16. Mr. Korbly knew my father, who was working in the local trade union as a carpenter, and when he heard that I was going to college he offered to tutor me. He was a great teacher and he opened my mind. I graduated from college and I went on to law school. But it was Mr 82157476af
